Letter from the President by Rosemarie Marsh

You who know me, know I am forever saying there is not enough time. It is true, but my efforts are to push back against this truth, to not give in. I want to make time; committed time, for taking photographs but time slips away from me with relentless agility. What I am trying to do in the face of this is to weave photography into everyday life. Here is a peek into the ordinary, a little of what it looks like for me.

Two of my grandchildren spent the weekend. This is such an ordinary event and heart-wrenchingly special at once. Ordinary takes the form of play, naps, meals, and mostly maintaining routine. Oh, but the special. How can I keep my heart from skipping at the sight and sound of these little ones? They are still small enough to delight in a world where they see the unseen, and where actual things are not as they seem. We play pirates and fairies, and what may look like paper towel cores held together with elastic bands are actually binoculars that keep us safe from the bad guys. These children are still small enough to not follow the logic that as pirates, we probably are the bad guys. Their lovely world transcends the rules of logic and how lucky for me to spend the weekend there.

They play and so do I. They play with toys, whatever they find, and with imagination. I play with my camera.

The landing on the staircase became the pirate ship. One steered the ship, while the other searched the horizon through cardboard lenses. We landed on islands and wearing newspaper hats we came ashore searching for treasure. Once found, it was back onto the ship to the next island. We amassed a fortune of coins, skeleton keys, necklaces and camera equipment.

My treasure; first trip was a tripod. Next was a light to clamp on the railing. My treasures looked silly to the kids who were delighted with their newfound snow globe, and porcelain doll. Each trip away left me able to set up more of my equipment. Eventually the lighting was as good as it was going to be. The camera was ready. My pirates returned and I was able to convince them to sit on the fore deck for a shot with their riches. So there they sat, on the stairs, with a riot of treasure at their feet. The only thing visible through the viewfinder was a Christmas card headshot of two darling happy children with lit Christmas lights hung around their necks. While I knew all along that I wanted to try for a nice image, for them it was just an afternoon of play.

It is evening now; they have gone home happy and chattering to their parents about the details of their sleepover. I am tired and thoughtful, knowing that the images I captured are sweet but I am also aware of more. I am acutely aware that this is not second best. Taking these images was as creative and satisfying as the ones I take on a day away. I still long for more time, but I won't discount the value of taking images in the day-to-day ordinary experiences of life.

My message as we head into the winter holidays is don't wait; make the photograph. Don't wait to have time. Things are going to get busier for all of us, it will seem harder to take time, but keep looking, keep seeing, and create the image.

Have a wonderful holiday season.

Program by Rob DeRobertis and Mike O'Connor. Lightroom and Photoshop. Dual presentation on work flow.

October 15, 2009 -by Billi Manning

Onne van der Wal is a nautical photographer based in Newport, RI. His assignments for clients take him all over the world. The photographs in his presentation were technically stunning; some were obviously shot from precarious positions on and above the water making them all the more impressive. His easy going narration was interesting and at times humorous making this a most enjoyable program.

Article about Ann McEvoy's presentation of "Making your images wall worthy":

I want to thank Ann McEvoy for a very inspiring presentation on photographing people.

There were workers doing re-siding on my house so I went out to photograph their progress.

One of the guys had a unique knit hat on so I asked if I could take his picture.

He was sort of shy about it, but my dog was there and he leaned down to pat him, and it made his pose very natural.

I used my 105 lens at 6.3. then I made up some 5x7 prints and I noticed that when he put them in his truck he was looking at his images for a long time. I am sure that he was very pleased. Thanks Ann for the inspiration. It felt good.

Pamela Ruby Russell, an award winning recording and performing songwriter as well as writer and community activist, is a new member of New England's highly regarded Stony Brook Camera Club which meets in Wrentham, MA. Her photograph, "Friends By The River" has been selected to be shown at the Zullo Gallery's 15th Annual Juried Exhibition. She has been taking pictures for years but it was not until recently that she felt comfortable with calling herself "photographer." Both the craft of songwriting and the art of taking pictures bring her much joy and satisfaction. Her work has been exhibited in New England as well as published in the Boston Globe, literary magazines and other publications. Her photographs have been used commercially for CD covers, book jackets, and public relations shots.

"To have the ability to be present and observe, to really see with all the senses and then capture with a camera more than just form, but also a subject's relationship with its form, its essence, that for me is a photographer's job. Life is beautifully profound, though painfully fragile and tragic at times. Intimately recording the authentic center of a subject, be it a large crowd, a simple portrait, a still life or landscape, even the candid shot, I find the experience completely exhilarating. This is something I can do, with love, gratitude, compassion and hopefully, more and more expertise."
